The Graduate School of Professional Psychology offers five degrees, including the Doctor of Psychology (PsyD), that all aim to prepare graduate students for professional, and especially clinical, practice. Focusing on applied professional work from a practitioner-scholar perspective, the Graduate School of Professional Psychology also offers master's-level programs in Sport and Performance Psychology, International Disaster Psychology, Forensic Psychology, and Sport Coaching (online), along with a graduate certificate in Strength and Conditioning and Fitness Coaching (online). In addition to our degree-granting programs, we added specialty areas in the following topics: Latinx psychology, military psychology, oncology psychology, substance use disorders, and infant and early childhood mental health. Our goals are to train professionals in understanding human behavior through the integration of theory, research, and practice and to improve the human condition through competent and ethical service.
